Sadat's campaign against Kingdom, PLO denounced

Arabia lashed back at Egyptian President Anwar Sadat Wednesday, as the Palestine Liberation Organization pledged to under-mine Sadat's future autonomy negotiations with the United States and Israel for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.
Saudi Arabia and the PLO were reacting to Sadat'a May Day speech in which he accused the Kingdom of "paying off" other Arab countries to break off dip-Arab commerce with Egypt. Sadat alleged that current Sandi leaders departed from the traditional policy of "special relation-ship" with Egypt that was charted by the late King Faisal. Sadat claimed King Faisal advised him before the 1973 war not to trust Syrian President Hafez

"Sadat is a liar," said Riyadh radio. "he even lies about the - dead." The broadcast accused Sadat of trying to drive a wedge between Saudi Arabia and Syria. Syria, which was Egypt's partner in the 1973 war, now heads the Arab front that opposes Sadat's separate peace treaty with Israel. Sadat accused the Saudi leader--ship of succumbing to "pressure and threats' from Arab radicals. The Egyptian leader elaimed Assad threatened at the Arah summit conference in Baghdad last November to "take the struggle to the bedrooms' of nther Arab leaders if they refrained from npposing the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Turning to the PLO, Sadat said the organization was made up of twenty bickering groups that have been accusing each other of Libya also reacted strongly tn Sadar's speech accusing the Egyp-tian president of treachety to the Arah cause. The official Jamahiriyah News Agency (Jana) said Sadat had shown ingratitude for all the help received from KHARTOUM, May 2 (AP) -Sudan's vice president is scheduled to begin a tour nn Friday of Libya and Algeria.

The announcement Tuesday night by Sudan's official news agency follnwed a statement by Kuwaiti Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al-Ahmad Al-Sabah earlier in the day that Sudan had disassociated itself from the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Sudanese President Jaafar Numeiri has been President Anwar Sadat's strongest supporter and Sudan is one of only four Arab countries that have not severed diplomatic ties with Egypt in protest against the treaty.

The news agency said VicePresident Rashid al-Taher will carry a handwritten message from Numeiri to Libyan leader Moammar Qaddafi, His three-day tour is the first ministerial-level visit since Libya was accused of backing a 1976 coup attempt against Taher is scheduled to deliver a similar message to Algerian Presi-dent Chadli Bejedid before going on to Morocco to discuss the peace treaty and other Middle East issues at the Islamic foreign ministers conference, scheduled for May 7-12 in Fez.

The news agency said Taher would visit Libya at the invitation of the Qaddafi government to discuss "bilateral relations and assues" nf common interest." No other details were given.

Towed from Antarctica

Kingdom may get iceberg water next year

JEDDAH, May 2 - Early next year Prince Muhammad Al-Faisal will be ready to supply water from icebergs towed from the Antarctic to consumers in the Kingdom and other arid lands.

He said in an interview that experts would submit reports on exploiting icebergs to a meeting in December in Cambridge, and after that "we will go into contracts."

Scientists from the United States, Europe, Egypt and Lebanon working for Prince Muhammad's research firm IFF have apparently agreed that the venture is practical. He has set up a company, Iceberg Transport International, to handle carrying.

Antarctica, he said, is like the high seas, an open region that any state can exploit. It holds 90 per cent of the fresh water on Earth, and when the world is threatened by a shortage of water, drought and pollution, icebergs make a more than practical source of

The technical problems involved in transporting icebergs so far have been resolved. A medium-sized block of ice, weighing several tons, has a draught of

There are apparently no possible dangers of harm to the environment from the project: "On the contrary, it will improve the environment by increasing vegetation, and there will be none of the poliution given out by power

Food production in an area like Saudi Arabia could also be increased three times.

Prince Muhammad estimates that one iceberg may hold enough water to supply the world for a year, although he could not tow so vast a bulk.

Sandi Arabia would need over four billion tons of water a year by the year 2000, while production from the usual sources is expected then to be running at one billion tons a year,

The cost of other possible means of satisfying that demand, m infrastructure, labor and technology "dwarfts even the budget of Saudi Arabia

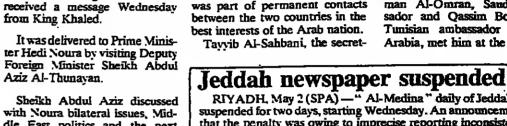

Fully exploited, his iceberg project could eventually produce a flow of fresh water equivalent to 22 times that of the Nile.

Prince Muhammad estimates the cost of research and towing the iceberg to an arid country at $100 million, but if it were sold at the international average price of 50 cents a ton, be could be earning about $30 million a year.

Swissair has more room instead of more seats.

Swissair has taken the decision to have only eight seats abreast in the economy class of its DC-10s, in future as in the past: arranged in groups of two with ample amnrests and wide aisles.

This means we must carry fewer passengers per plane than many other airlines do. As against this, though, you won't have more than one person sitting beside you; you'll have the elbow room you need, the cabin crew can give you even more attention; you won't wake up with a stiff back; you can read your paper without folding it; according to mood and compartment you can smoke or not smoke; you can really relax for a change; fewer passengers get more good of the cabin facilities; if you're flying at regular rates, from April, 1979, on you can make a firm seat reservation when booking your long-distance flight.

You see we're firmly convinced that you'll get more out of your flight if our wide-bodied planes continue to be pleasanter and more comfortable by the margin of some non-existent seats (our Jumbos, correspondingly, have only nine instead of ten seats abreast in economy class). You'll get more out of the plane. And let's be honest, we tend to hope that carrying a few passengers less but pampering all passengers more might mean our gaining more passengers in total.

As to where and when you can fly with these comfortable aircraft, your IATA travel agent or Swissair will be happy to tell you.

New Chad government sworn in

PARIS, May 2 (AP) — The provisional government in Chad, formed in March to end months of factional violence in that central African nation, has turned over power to a new chief of state, the Sudanese news agency SUNA reported from the Chadian capital of N'Djamena.

The report said Col. Muhammad Shawwa, a 39-year-old official in Chad's Social Security Department, took the oath of office Monday night at ceremonies in N'Djamena.

It was administered by Goukouni Oueddei, leader of the Chad National Liberation Front who has served as provisional chief of state since a peace agreement was reached in March in Kano, Nigeria.

Shawwa formed a new 20member government, according to SUNA, to prepare for free elections for a national assembly within nne year.

Oueddei becomes minister of the interior and Hissen Habre, the former rebel leader and then premier, takes the defense ministry. A Frolinat spokesman said he believed the government has a good chance of survival because all factions represented were united in opposition to Libyan incursions into northern Chad.

The government is comprised of seven Christians and three Muslims from southern Chad, and 10 northerners from various factions of the Frolinat Liberation Movement

On March 31, three days after the plant's Unit 2 suffered a severely damaging accident, NRC spokesman Frank Ingram said that oxygen appeared to be mixing with the hydrogen of a bubble inside the sealed reactor vessel.

Ingram said this posed the possibility of an eventual explosion which could blow the reactor open and shatter its radioactive fuel, retising the risk of large release of radioactivity to the surrounding zoimtryside.

The Energy Department findings are based on a probe conducted after Fri's August 1977 testimony before the House Subcommittee on Energy and Power.

"We found facts showing that (Fri) may have made intendonally inaccurate statements about his knowledge of a U.S. intelligence agency's views on the alleged diversion of special nuclear material," said the 10-page report, prepared by Deputy Inspector General Thomas Williamson.

Though the CIA's official conclusions were edited from the report, the agency reportedly suspects the missing uranium may have been smuggled to Israel for use in nuclear weapons.

FBI documents indicate there is no evidence the uranium left the country, and to date no charges have been made in connection with the missing fuel. The case centers on the disappearance in the early 1960s of about 93 kilograms of uranium from the Nuclear Materials and Equipment Corp., a a private uranium processing firm in Apollo, Pennsylvania. Fri has said he never saw a signed document or heard from an authoritative CIA official that the agency definitely concluded the uranium was stolen.

But the inspector general's report, pointing to Fri's CIA hriefings and evidence that Fri inspected sensitive CIA documents prior to the hearing, disagrees with that account.

Nuclear accident in another U.S. plant reported

ZION, III., May 2 (R) - The second reported accident at an American nuclear power plant in a mooth has allowed radioactive gas to escape into air and released 700 tons of radioactive water within the plant, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) said Tuesday.

But the NRC stressed that Monday's accident, at a plant on the shores of Lake Michigan, 40 miles from Chicago, was in no way similar to the near-disaster at Three Mile Island, pennsylvania, March 28, when there was a partial melting of the nuclear core.

NRC officials said the amount of radioactivity released through the building's ventilation system.

The NRC said three employees were enjured but the company said one man was sprayed with radioactive material and later tests showed there was no presence of radioactive contamination.

The British Foreign Office said the Soviet emhassy in London had been in touch with the Foreign Office about the journalist, Alexander Istomin, 31, who had been on the London staff of the Soviet press agency Novosti.But the office declined to say whether the embassy had asked for permission to send a Soviet diplomat to interview him.

Istomin had been working for Novosti for a year. The Home Office said he had been given permission to remain in Britain for an initial period of 12 months. The member of the folk dance troupe was named as Galina Orionova, identified as a interpreter by the Foreign Office. She slipped away from the tronpe when it was passing through London Airport on its way home from Dublin.

The Foreign Office said so far the Soviet embassy had not been in touch with the Foreign Office about her case, which was not linked to that of Istomin.

The Home Office spokesman said Miss O rionova had applied to remain in Britain and that she had been permitted to stay while her request was being considered.

The "Daily Mirror" newspaper said Istomin vanished on April 13 hut that over two weeks went by before the Soviet authorities reported him missing.

The newspaper said the journalist walked into a police station and asked for asylum. When his identity was known, the "Daily Mirror" added, Special Branch police were called in

EUROPE'S ROLE

In the uproar following the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, Europe has been conspicuous by silence. There were endorsements by some, notably Britain and Germany, and reservations expressed privately by France. But overall, Europe appears nervously content to buy its oil from the Arabs and oranges from the Israelis while ducking responsibility for a situation it is, after all, responsible for creating.

For quite awhile, many Arabs believed the United States was the only country that could convince Israel that withdrawal from the occupied territories and peace with its neighbors was vital to Israel's future. As it stands at the moment, Israel appears to have convinced the United States that Zionist strategies win elections and that peace in the region is contingent on Ersatz Israel. Israel will give up the Sinai in exchange for south Lebanon and a Pax Americana across the Suez Canal. For those with short memories, it is well to point out that such myopic thinking directly contributed to the October War of 1973.

While Mr. Carter came into office knowing little about the Middle East, he has least applied himself to trying to untangle the grip of Israeli thinking on American foreign policy. He has not been successful. There are several seasoned leaders in Europe, however, who know only too well the politics of the region. This alone is enough to make their dumbstruck attitudes difficult to fathom.

Britain, which once held the mandate over Palestine, is in the throes of a national election. Yet where in the course of that campaign has there been mention by either Mr. Callaghan or Mrs. Thatcher of today's Palestine question? What of Messers Schmidt and Giscard, Europe's reigning state-

It is time Europe re-entered the Middle East political question as a moderator. The Americans have tried, and largely failed, which is all the more reason for Europe to join in and lend its authority to a redress of the current lop-sided balance in favor of Israel.

Peace... in dollars

WASHINGTON -

In trying to sell a special Middle East aid package to Congress, President Carter is struggling to explain why the $4.8 billion price tag

Although little outright opposition has surfaced, members of Congress have bluntly warned Carter that American taxpayers are unhappy about footing the Egypt-Israel peace treaty bill.

Opinion polls show the public opposed to additional aid to those countries by a two-to-one margin. Apparently speaking for many collegues, Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, recently said: "I think all of us are receiving mail which raises a perfectly legitimate question: Why should we pay for the

His statement is of more than passing interest because Church is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which must

Appearing before Church's committee recently, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Defense Secretary Harold Brown said Middle East peace benefits far outweigh the costs. Brown called the treaty "the cornerstone of a comprehensive, long-term peace with resulting stability for the entire region." Vance argued that the price of peace "is modest compared with the cost of further war." He said four Middle East wars in 30 years have cost the United States "several tens of billions of dollars in direct costs alone." The 1973 Arab-Israeli war cost the United States more than $7 billion in additional aid to Israel.

Carter has said both countries must be "confident of their security" to ensure "enduring peace.

The special U.S. aid package includes: For Israel, an $800 million grant to replace two air bases that will be taken over by Egypt and $2.2 billion in loans to purchase weapons and military supplies. - For Egypt, $300 million in loans to bolster that country's shaky economy, and $1.5 billion in loans to purchase weapons.

Carter said the actual cost to the American taxpayer will be only $1.1 billion over four years because most of the aid is in loans. But this is on top of the regular U.S. foreign aid program of $1.8 billion a year for Israel and $1 billion for Egypt. The loans for weapons will carry interest rates of 9-10 percent, with repayment over 30 years. The $300 million economic aid loan to Egypt is virtually a grant because the interest rate will be only 2-3 percent over 30 years.

There may be a move in Congress to convert at least part of the loans to grants.

Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin has said heavy repay-ments will be "very burdensome." Israel already pays the United States nearly $450 million a year on past loans, and the new loans would add another $200 million.

Carter administration officials, however, have said Israel can readily make those payments.

Begin has asked for half of the $3 billion aid to Israel in grants, and for interest rates on the remaining loans to be lowered to 1-2

Brown and Vance admit the United States now is deeply involved in the Middle East but stress that the country is not committed to boosting its military presence there. The US, aid will help Israel modernize its armed forces and replace military bases now in the the Sinai. Under the treaty Israel will gradually turn over the Sinai to Egypt within three years. Through the $800 million grant, the United States will pay most of the cost of moving two air bases from the Sinai to the Negev desert in Israel. The United States will build the new bases for Israel. In addition to financial aid, Carter gave Israel security and oil guarantees in connection with the peace treaty. Egypt was offered a security guarantee, but turned it down. The security guarantee pledged the United States to take "appropriate measures to promote full observance" of the peace

"There is no hidden purpose or hidden meaning" in the guarantee, Vance said. "It cannot be construed as representing a mutual security pact with Israel, even though its existence provides Israel with significant psychological reassurance as it enters into this new relationship with Egypt."

The oil guarantee commits the United States to supplying Israel with oil for up to 15 years if its normal supplies are cut off. Israel would pay for the oil.

Although the aid to Egypt is mostly military, both Brown and Vance emphasized the need to restore Egypt's troubled economy. "The future of Egypt will not turn primarily on the strength of its

The $1.5 billion in arms sales loans will enable Egypt to purchase jets, air defense equipment and other military supplies. But even that huge infusion of American arms" is substantially maller than what is required for full modernization of Egypt's armed forces," Brown said. And he insisted the United States is not attempting to transform Egypt into a "regional policeman." — (CQ)

Aerospace revival

By William Rustrum

LOS ANGELES —

The southern California aerospace industry, which was dealt a near-fatal blow a decade ago when the nation's space program was severely curtailed, has bounced back and is using its technology to expand into other areas and create thousands of jobs. Instead of competing solely for aircraft and space contracts from the government, the companies are working in areas such as energy resources, environmental controls and mass transit. The Hughes Corp., which has five divisions, has 3,500 job openings, including engineers, computer scientists, machinists, technicians, programmers and secretaries. Northrop Corp. has 300 openings in its aircraft group, and Priscilla Florence, employment manager, said, "the job picture is

At Garrett Airesearch manufacturing division, Jim Wade, employment administrator, said his company plans to hire about 1,900 employees by January 1983.

The aerospace of the late 1960s caused many in the field, especially engineers, to change professions, and those who did not found themselves unemployed for long periods. But that crisis, Wade said, bas indirectly led to the current ressurgence of aerospace companies.

Mideast peace: A Palestinian perspective

By Muhammad Milhem Mayor of Halhoul Special to Arab News

WASHINGTON -(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following was delivered this week as a peech before a Washington conference on U.S. policy in the Middle East sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. Milhem was elected mayor of the West Bank town of Halhoul in March 1976 after running no a Palestinian nationalist town. Halboul was placed under an oppressive 23-hour-a-day curfew by Israeli military authorities at the time of the Egyptian-Israeli treaty signing.)

More than half a century ago, the international community through the League of Nations - determined that the Palestinian people were fit for self-government. Today we are offered "autonomy" for one-third of our people in one-fifth of our country.

We know of no convincing justification for this severe diminishment of our national rights, except that it is dictated by the presently prevailing configuration of power. Equally, we know of no convincing reason why we should undermine our rights and authentic regional peace by accepting and therefore legitimizing this new injustice. We owe it to ourselves, to the people of our region, and to the cause of lasting peace to hold out and strive for an equitable peace which can be willingly embraced rather than oppressive settlement which must be gradgingly and temporarily endured.

We, the Palestinian people, experienced greater sorrow and felt deeper deprivation, as a consequence of conflict and war, than did the other peoples of the Middle East. It should be readily believed, therefore, that our need for peace is not less than theirs, and that our yearning for peace is not less sincere. It is precisely for this reason that we are alarmed and angered by the present mutation of our hope for a comprehensive regional peace into a partial bilateral settle-

During the past few years, the community of nations gradually developed a consensus regarding the nature of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. This conception was affirmed and reaffirmed in numerous bilateral and multilateral statements, declarations, and resolutions by states as well as regional and international

This international consensus, from which only a handful of states have chosen to deviate, and which we the Palestinians find to be an acceptable basis for a just and lasting peace, includes the following two principal components.

1. Peace must be comprehensive if it is not to be continually in danger of collapse. This means that the settlement should resolve all the tributary issues to the conflict, and that it should satisfy all the parties involved.

2. The basic underlying cause of the Middle East conflict is the Palestine problem, that is to say, the homelessness and statelessness of the Palestinian people. A just and lasting peace, therefore, must include the realization of the Palestinian people's right to selfdetermination including their right to political independence in a national state on their native soil.

Any settlement which fails to satisfy these two principles will be, of necessity, partial and imposed, and it will produce a truce rather than a state of peace.

The "Framework for Peace" in the Middle East agreed at Camp David and the consequent negotiations and agreements, including the treaty of peace between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the State of Israel professed a commitment to the proposition that a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East is an "urgent necessity," but they failed to demonstrate fidelity to this commitment by seeking formulas which blatantly ignore and circumvent both of the basic and essential pre-requisites of such a peace. They seek, instead, to impose on our region a settlement which leaves more unsatisfied parties than it appeases, and more unresolved issues than those to which it addresses itself.

We, the Palestinians, and all of the peoples of our region have a right to an anthentic peace. Equally, we share the obligation and the responsibility to reject and resist attempts to foist upon us a tranquilizing substitute. We believe that Israel sought and obtained at Camp David a formula which can only and of necessity lead to the closed road of unilateral settlement with Egypt. This is evident from the fact that while the accords conceded the mutual claims of Israel and Egypt (Israeli withdrawal from occupied Sinai and Egyptian recognition of Israel and the normalization of relations between them), they failed to maintain the symmetry by conceding even in principle the claims of any of the other parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict. As far as the Palestinian dimension of the conflict is concerned, the agreement was deliberately designed to provoke Palesti-

1. It addresses "the inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip" rather than the Palestinian people. We find this evasion of the problem unacceptable for two reasons. First, the inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip are a third of the Palestinian people. A minority cannot legitimately act on behalf of the whole. Second, it is the majority of people, ignored by the agreements, who suffered most. While the residents of the West Bank and Gaza live under occupation, they at least live in their homeland. The rest are the victims of forced exile.

2. The Camp David agreements and the consequent negotiations accept the premise that the peoples concerned are free to designate their spokesmen and representatives. The Palestinian people alone are denied this right. The Palestine Liberation Organization is accepted by the Palestinian people and by the overwhelming majority of the nations of the world as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. The Camp David agreements require the Palestinians to seek a substitute leadership as a condition for any sort of participation.

3. The agreements envision "antonomy" for the inhabitants of one-fifth of Palestine. In political terminology, autonomy is less than independence, and an autonomous region is a part of a larger state. The agreements, therefore, rule out the possibility of independence. We see no reason why we should be interested in negotiating a settlement which rules out in advance the option of independence for the Palestinian people. We have no interest in legitimizing Israeli occupation by consenting to a thinly camouflaged version of it.

4. Jerusalem, the city built by the Arab Jabosites before the Hebrews ever set foot on this land, is the heart of Palestinian history and heritage. It is also the geographic link between the northern and southern halves of the West Bank. We are neither willing nor able to envision a future without it.

5. Any agreement which does not require, without equivocation, an internationally supervised cessation to Israeli settlement in the West Bank and Gaza betrays lack of good faith and a cruel disregard for the future of our people. It is the sine qua non of the confidence-building process which is alleged to be the principal achievement and merit of the ongoing diplomacy. 6. The agreements represent a regression from earlier international commitments to the Palestinian refugees. They make no mention of their internationally recognized right to choose repatriation or compensation. They simply promise that their tragedy be discussed and that a solution be sought. Before Camp David there were agreed-upon solutions needing implementation. Now, there is simply a problem which will someday be considered. The Palestinian people are not unaware of the complexity of the issues. Therefore, they do understand and expect the need for lengthy and difficult negotiations. They are even reconciled to the prospect of phased implementation of a peaceful settlement. They certainly do not expect that the accumulated injustices would vanish overnight, and they do not day-dream of easy and sudden freedom. But they are equally aware of the sterility of negotiating a settlement which in advance rules ont the essence of their national identity, rights, and aspirations.

The Palestinian people would be prepared to discuss how, when, under what conditions, and in exchange for what they are to achieve independence in their homeland. But they are not prepared, and no one has the right to expect them to be prepared, to discuss the modalities of denying them their national freedom.

saudi press review

"The Arab world did not need to be told anew that President Sadat has sold its cause to Israel at the cheapest possible price, and that he had handed over Egypt to the zionists at no cost," according to " Al-bilad ".

"Nor were we in need of hearing more lies and fabrications about his treaty with Israel but we were truly surprised to hear him say that he would take two steps for every step taken by Israel for the sake of his concept for peace.

"What peace can be achieved through such capitulation to the

'Sadat has gone even further in his betrayal of the Arabs further than Begin himself would have done. But the Arab world knows how to deal with Sadat and his regime and to eradicate the surrender plan that he is trying to drag us all into.

Defending the Saudi stand, the paper said that the Kingdom "has always stood in the forefront of the Arab struggle against the enemy and placed all its resources at the disposal of the struggle for liberation and the restoration of the rights of the Palestinians,"

The paper called for completely isolating the Egyptian regime and pledged that Saudi Arabia and the other Arab states "will continue the struggle until the end."

"This is the most critical juncture in Arab history," according to " Okaz ". It calls for a complete realization of the nature of things and the changes which necessitate Arab and Muslim unity. From this point of view, it should be necessary to distinguish between the bonds that tie the Arabs together and the deviations of their leaders.

But Saudi Arabia bas clear political line based on the fact that this is an Arab and Muslim country. The government has been conducting our Arab and foreign policy on this basis and no slanders or attacks will diminish this role or the government's determination.

"The Egyptian leaders made a mistake in believing that we can be forced to give up this role by insulting us.

The paper said that Saudi Arabia "does not wish to join in slander campaigns with Sadat because this impulsive style cannot serve Arab interests but can only lead to further fragmentation of Arab resources."

" Al Nadwa " said that "Sadat has revealed a remarkable identity of views with Zionist thinking when he alleged that the Palestine Liberation Organization has nothing to do with the occupied territories and that he would negotiate with Israel over the area. This is the basis of Begin's zionist concept that Palestine is a land without a people and the Jews were a people without a land. This identity of views explains Sadat's scramble to give in to all the Israeli demands and his rush to sign a treaty with the enemy

although he had heard before and Israelis intend to fill the occupied lands with Jewish settlers and have no intention of returning them to their owners. Sadat has gone to the extent of posing as the representative of the Palestinian peopie and to sign further agreements on their behalf. This means that Sadat is not satisfied with the damage that he has already done but persists in his attempts to flout all known morals and principles.

He is deliberately challenging the legality of the PLO which has been recongnized by the world with the exception of Israel which is fighting it on the battlefield. "Sadat has really gone beyond by the zionists."

the limits of reason in his attempt to change the facts or obliterate realities which is the style adopted 'Sadat's surrender to Israel has given him the insolence to attack

other Arab leaders in a way that shows he has an unlimited fund of according to Jazirah ". "Sandi Arabia received the bion's share of his insults as he forgot in his blind hatred Saudi Arabia's assistance to Egypt in times of distress. But we are not surprised by this ingratitude now that he has surrendered to the zionist enemy.

"But whatever Sadat does, he cannot convince anybody that the people of Egypt are in favor of his treason if only the Egyptians are given the right of free expression. But he makes a mistake if he believes that his insults will divert the Arabs from their chosen path and their war with the enemy. If his insults are a result of a serious psychological state, they have also revealed his true dimensions and the type of man he is. He may go on attacking the Arab world, but he will be ignored because the Arabs are busy with an issue more sublime which he cannot comprehend' the paper said.

Optical whimsy intrigues the kids

DHAHRAN — "He didn't say 'Abracadabra," worried one small child. "I guess he forget." Another yooogster argued, "That's just in story books. That's not what illusionists say. They use words like 'hoens pocus,' but if you're a real professional like Fred, you don't need such words

The subject of these obsevations was Fred Maro, a German illusionist who cutertained childreo last week in Dhahran, Rivadh and Jeddah with a whirusical set of optical illusions. At the Saudi Arabian International School here, 1,300 children sat cross-legged on the floor, for the show, packed under a sun dome. Wide-eyed, they followed Fred's every move as he snipped ropes, made them whole again, made small red balls large, transformed newspapers into ladders and tree and mysteriously caused an umbrella cover to disappear from its frame and be replaced by bright

In one of his most unusual tricks, Fred Maro poured water from a jug over and over again.

The water seemed to gush out inexhaustibly. The children suggested many curious explanations for this mystery — from hidden pumps and steam-producing engines connected to the pitcher to layers within it. The fact that they couldn't really understand the trick made them admire it all

A Korean girl, Yonhee Kim, was surprised that Fred wore a business suit and was not at all the resplendent mysterious figure that an illusionist cuts in Korea. Twelve-year-old Maryn Elliot explained, "It's too hot for him to get into different clothes. Also, if he's wearing a suit, he's got more pockets to hide his gadgets. Anyhow, you don't watch him because of his clothes, you watch him because of the tricks."

The children laughed at his 'mistakes," as Fred called green scarves red and hlue silks green. The older ooes believed Fred was doing this playfully or as a coverup to help him prepare for his next trick. The younger children were engaged in enthusiastically correcting him. Eight-year-old German Marc-Oliver Kalis thought Fred had forgotten the names of the colors, because "Fred speaks German, and English is hard for Germao-speaking people to

"Fred Maro started his training at the age of eight, by doing rope tricks," explained Herald Bomberg, District Sales Manager for Lufthansa Airlines which brought Fred from Germany for the promotional event. "Maro has since intrigued audiences in four continents, and placed seventh in the World Championships for 'Close-up" illusions much more in Europe. Germany, which is a party to the convention, nevertheless enjoys an uneoviable reputation as one of the main illicit markets.

Only 51 of the world's nations are members of the coovention. Belgium and Japan, neither of which are members, are the other main markets. The Netherlands was a big buyer, too, until it passed tough oew legislation.

Indonesia is a major exporter of wildlife; 200 birds of paradise have been leaving its shores each week, many of them smuggled out through Papua New Guinea. Indonesia also exports turtles, as do Thailand, India, the Philippines and Mexico; the main markets are Taiwan, Japan, Germany, Italy and Belgium.

Crocodile skins are flown out from Singapore, Tbailand, Indonesia, Bolivia and Paraguay to Italy, France and Germany. Ivory poaching is increasing in Zambia, Uganda and the Ivory Coast. The Ceotral Africao Empire, which exported the equivalent of 3,595 pairs of tusks in 1977, seems to be acting as a clearing house (Emperor Bokassa runs importers. The convectioo is having some success in attracting offenders into membership and, into changing their ways. Indonesia has just the ivory business). Japan and Hong Kong have been the leading joined and Japan has announced its intention to do so.

The coovention lists 612 species and groups of species which may not be traded at all and 262 which can be traded only under control. The parties can change these lists: indeed Britain scored a considerable success during the meeting by adding all types of whale. But wildlife traders often keep ahead of them, switching their attention to unlisted species which are then peedily brought into peril.

Any member can refuse to accept restrictions on any species the convention names. For example, France allows in hides from some of the most endangered crocodiles in the interests of its reptile skin industry.

The convention pays little attention to plants, eveo though some 10 per cent of the world's species may be rare or threatened.

Many parties to the convention fail to enforce it with any rigor. Customs officers in some member countries seem to know little of the regulations, and identifying specimens often requires special training, frequently not provided.

While the U.S. Judtice Departmeot claims that there have been 20,000 prosecutions in America since 1973, Britain has seeo only five in the last three years - and two of these were brought privately by an environmental pressure group.

Eveo wheo there are prosecutions, the convention's secretariat complains, contraventions of the coovention tend to be treated as

Nevertheless, Macondo's fate is decided after ir. Herbert and Jack Brown have dissected the local bananas with a scapel and imported a cadre of agronomists, topographers, eogineers, hydrologists and surveyors who judge the town ready to emerge. The villagers don't have time to dwell on its implications, however, as the gringos (foreigners) transform Macondo overnight by huilding an encampment of wooden, zinc-roofed houses "surrounded by a metal fence topped with a band of electrified chicken wire which, during the cool summer mornings, would be black with roasted swallows."

The banana company changes weather patterns, speeds up the harvest cycle, diverts the river and, not incidentally, exploits the newly-hired banana

"Look at the mess we've got ourselves into," exclaims battle-scarred national hero, Colonel Bueodia, "just because we invited a gringo to eat some bananas.

Over the next decade, Macondo is alternately bullied, cajoled and dragged into the 20th century. The town's natural evolution is accelerated as one might change the speed of a newsreel.

Far-flung sons and cousins of the huge Buendia family return home: "We came," they say, "because everyone is coming."

Soon however, due to a popular uprising worthy of Macondo's most intractable ancestors, the banana company is forced to employ its own modero brand of magic. With cultivation suspended and fruit rotting on the trees, the company pays the local constabulary to assemble all the workers in the town square. With the same efficiency that enabled them to hring in the railroad and exterminate the voracious red ants, the company machineguns 3,000 dissident workers, loads the bodies onto flacars, dumps them into the sea and creates a monsoon lasting four years that erases all vestiges of the massacre and arrests Macondo's natural growth

In spite of the fact that the town calendars are changed to read, "Before or after the arrival of the banana company," the gringos, with all their power and ingeouity, are forced to forsake Macondo for better banana groves and the town is left in ruin. The houses, huilt so hastily during the banana fever, are abandoned. Despite this ominous and necessarily sketchy outline, "One Hundred Years of Solitude" is profoundly more than the cliched, tragic story of Third World exploitatioo.

If anything the book chronicles the exploitation and ultimate victory over all human activity of solitude itself. The town is founded on an idea conceived in solitude by Jose Acadio Buendia. It dissolves 200 years later as his descendant, Aureliano. contemplates in solitude, "the fearful whirlwind of dust and rubble" that obliterates all evidence of a past and promise of a future.

The book is decidedly not a potboiler. It is, however, a fiercely stylistic saga of change and contimuity in a people who were "developed" long before they "emerged."

Home thoughts from abroad

DHAHRAN, May 2 - Bob Kuechenberg, an offensive line-man for the Miami Dolphins who has won All-Pro honors for the past five years, may not look the type to reduce grown men to tears of sentimentality.

But the sight of the six-foot four-inch, 255 pound footballer and the films he brings to places like the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain and Dahahran are uniquely American, and they bring thoughts of youth and home to the predominantly American audiences he sees.

"The Americans here are football-starved, "Kuechenberg said just before leaving his hotel for an evening of films and talk with 350 local employees of Northrop Corp.

"When we showed football films on a trip to Dubai last year. some of the men cried. And the question and answer session could have gone on all night.

Kuecbenberg, who is sports marketing representative for National Airlines in the football off-season, is on an eight-day promotional tour of Dhahran and Bahrain. He realizes that American foot-

LONDON, May 2 (AP) -Texaco started rationing gasoline deliveries to its 2,150 British garages by eight per cent from last year's levels Tuesday but appealed to motorists not to panic.

Pre-election jitters hit British stocks

LONDON, May 2 (AP) - The Loodoo Stock Exchange ran into a severe bout of election jitters Tuesday wheo an opinioo poll foresaw for the first time in Britain's electioo campaign a victory by the Labor Party.

Hopes of a Conservative win had bolstered shares all last week and seot industrials to an all-time

Brokers said volume was very low and the sharp drop in prices came mainly from marking down of prices by brokers in an effort to interest investors. An estimated billioo pounds ($ 2 billioo) was wiped off the book value of shares, according to exchange officials.

British government securities were down about 35 peoce at the short end, 50 in mediums and 25 at the loog end.

Among industrials, Imperial Chemicals slid 9 peoce, British Geoeral Electric 12, Guest Keen and Nettlefold and Bat Industries 7, International Computers Ltd. 5 and Courtanlds 4.

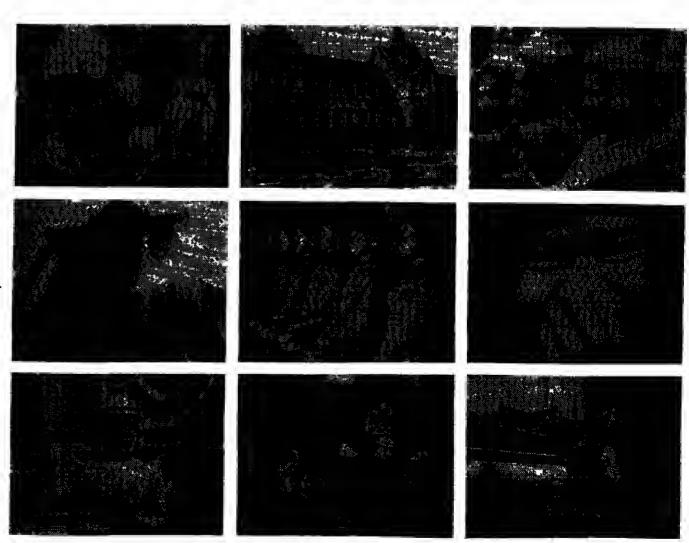

British Petroleum fell 26 pence, Shell transport 25 in a sharply lower mil sector.

Louisiana gas fire out of control

NEW ORLEANS, May 2 (AP) — A natural gas well burned out of control Wednesday on a drilling rig in marshes south of New Orleans as wild well experts prepared a plan to snuff it out. Four crewmen suffered burns when the Texaco well exploded Tuesday as workers pulled up the drill to make tests. John Porter of Texaco said crewmen were pulling the drill out of the well so they could lower a sensor the hole to learn what was in it at that depth. He said the fire was touched off by failure of in which was meant to get a natural gas bubble out of Boots Co. Ltd. New York Bond Market A Special Report by Lindley B. Richert because the really big players had such costly experiences in record offerings, a dealer remarked. Most bonds have performed poorly for many months. They began a pronounced adjustment to still lower praces and higher yields best Friday in reaction to a further tightening of monetary policy by the Federal Reserve System.

The markdowns continued an Monday and ranged to about 'a point, equivalent to 5 dollars for every 1,000 dollars face amount.

Whether that trend will persist 'depends on the markets evolutation of the probability of a receasion in the near term as well as its estimate of the most likely course of inflation,' Citibank economists asserted. If the Fede tightening move is perceived as leading to recession in which inflation pressures are expected to cool — hond yields and other lengthy rates won't climb by much, but if inflation expectations aren't lowered, those rates may well go above current levels, 'the hoad officials added.

Late Monday, Chase Manhattan Corp.'s 300 million dollars of convertible flooting-rate notes began reastle trading at about 99%. The 30-year wates, yielding 10.75% initially, hed been priced originally at 100. At least 85 million dollars remained unsold from that offering, began test week. about 2.5 billion dollars in fresh cash.
Parchase orders for the two new issues must be received by 1.30 p.m. EDT on the respective days at the Treasury in Washington or at Federal Reserve banks and branches. Both the notes and boods are available in minimum sunemats of 1,000 dollars.

By late Monday, market specialists were estimating that the yields might be about 9%% by the notes and about 9%% by the bonds. Each rate would be the highest over for new treasury obligations of comparable maturity, the analysts said.

Even so, the lavestment dermand is likely to be only histowarm. More than 60% of the maturing securities are held by commercial banks and fereign accounts, but seither of these investor categories can be expected to exhibit great inserest in the new bases as the negative slope of the yield curve doesn't offer any incentive to extend portfolio maturities, Bank of New York commented.

That negative slope, the result of a more rapid dise by shorter-term rates in recent months, is a rarity. A negative pattern of returns on these two new issues would be the first in any treasury retunding sale cione August 1974, when six-year more yielded 8.75% oud 25-year bonds yielded 8.63%, Henry Kaufman of Selamon Brothers recalled. ## Black unions get bargaining rights

S. Africa agrees to end labor apartheid

CAPE TOWN, May 2 (AP) — South Africa's white minority government accepted Wednesday 'in principle' far-ranging recommendations that would dismantle three decades of racial discrimination oo the job.

Minister of Labor Fanie Botha announced the acceptance at a news conference bere. The South African Parliament was almost sure to go along with the government decision, since the ruling National Party controls 135 of the legislative body's 165 seats.

The recommendations were contained in a 60-page report made public and tabled Tuesday for immediate debate in the parliameet by a 14-member commission, headed by Prof. Nie Wiehahn, a white South African

Indian princes get aid despite privy purse loss

NEW DELHI, May 2 (R) -Seven years after losing their taxfree privy purses and other privileges, some of India's former princely rulers are still getting state aid.

Not all claimants are successful, hut so far 70 former princes and dependents have received grants totalling 106 million rupees ($ 13.2 million).

The grants, announced in Parliament Wednesday by Minister of State for Home Affairs Dhanik Lal Mandal, are to help them adjust to their "changed circums-

Before they were stripped of their titles and privileges, some 320 maharajas and other rulers were receiving tax-free incomes totalling 48 millioo rupees ($ 6 million) a year.

But former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi had the constitution amended to abolish the privileges princes were entitled to under the covenants by which they merged their states with India at independence in 1947.

labor expert, after two years of study.

Botha said the government approved the concept of free association, which would allow hlack unions to participate in collective bargaining for the first time in South Africa.

His government, he said, also aeeepted the commissioo's recommendation that job reservatioo be abolished. The Joh Reservation Act guarantees, under the law, certain skilled and semiskilled jobs for whites only.

Botha also said that the goverament approved the recognition of the previously unrecognized black unions and made no bones about why.

"It's more difficult to contain the position of an unregistered trade unioo which is free to move into politics," he explained.

"It's a much more dangerous situation than when they are under the guidance of the government and, at all times, in consulation with the government."

Earlier Wednesday, Wiehahn had predicted that "90 percent" of his commission's proposals would be accepted by the government.

His commission found that South African laws here "not up to date" with practices followed by subsidiaries of foreign corporations, as well as some South African companies that adhered to employment codes, he said.

"Practice outdeveloped law," Wiehahn said, making it oecessary to revamp legislation in order to "normalize relations with different population groups."

He said allowing blacks to par-ticipate in trade unions, and evectually eliminating the reservation of skilled jobs for whites will make the biggest deot in laws currently regulating the labor force, estimated at between five million and six million, with 70 per cent of them hlack.

The 14-member commission in its two year study, took into account the various codes used by local and foreign firms, including about 100 American companies operating in South Africa, that are aimed at eliminating discrimina-tico against coo-white workers, Wiehahn said.

The commission report, released Tuesday, recommended the repeal of legislation enforcing separate facilities for hlack and white employees in stores, offices and factories and also urged equal pay for equal work and integration of now all-white unions.

But, the commission left it to the employer to decide on integratioo facilities and the unions to determine their membership, taking the government away from the enforcement of discriminatory laws without putting it in a position of forcing integration.

"To move the system from a discriminatory one to a oondiscriminatory one - you can't do these things overnight," Wiehahn

Palestinian student shot during protest in Israel

TEL AVIV, May 2 (R) - A Palestinian studeot was wounded by gunfire Wednesday during a pro-Palestinian demonstratioo at Beir Zeit, 13 miles north of Jerusalem, army sources said.

It was the only violent incideot so far reported during Israel's 31st Independence Day celebrations Wednesday.

The sources said Rayid Nahle, an 18-year-old tudent at Beir Zeit College, was shot wheo a group of about 100 students carrying Palestinian flags marched towards a Barricades were thrown across a main road and cars were stooed and forced to halt, the sources said. A curfew was later imposed on the area around the college.

Noting that the closed shop, whereby employees must pay union dues, is a "well established practice in our system as it is in the rest of the world." Wiehahn said the concept would be kept under close scrutiny and stopped if found to be violating interests of individuals or a particular group.

Wiehahn predicted that openmg appreoticeships to blacks for the first time would make an impact in the "medium to long run," because of the current backlog and education handicaps of most blacks.

The South African labor force would begin to take a different shape in 10 years time, he said, with it eventually moving in "the direction of the democratization of the system giving full play to the forces of labor democracy in the system.

Botha said Wednesday the government would announce in a white paper next Tuesday, how fast it is prepared to go in implementing the Wiehahn proposals.

The opposition spokesman in parliament on lahor, Alex Boraine, welcomed the report as a dramatic shift from the government policy of racial segregation. He cautioned, bowever, that allowing trade unions to prescribe their own membership requirements could lead to the formation of three unions - hlack, white and mixed — all competing against each other in the same industry.

'This could offset many positive features of the report," Attie Nieuwoudt, ooe commis-sioo member, and president of the 200,000-member South African Federation of Labor, rejected almost all of the key recommendations. His action indicated that many white unious might be hostile to black participatioo in a unitary labor system.

Nieuwoudt was in favor of maintaining statutory work reservation for whites proposed that black workers be prohibited from joining any trade unioo in South
